

<http://www.gowerpublishing.com/isbn/9780566088759>

Making Ecopreneurs

Developing Sustainable
Entrepreneurship

Second Edition

Edited by

MICHAEL SCHAPER

Adjunct Professor, Curtin University Business School, Western Australia

GOWER

List of Contributors

Anne de Bruin is Professor of Economics in the School of Economics and Finance (Albany) at Massey University, New Zealand. Her research interests are entrepreneurship, sustainable employment and regional development. In entrepreneurship, she is particularly interested in new conceptualizations of entrepreneurship, entrepreneurship in the creative industries and women entrepreneurs. She has numerous refereed articles published, including recent articles in Entrepreneurship Theory & Practice. She is currently working on two co-edited books: on women's entrepreneurship in association with the Diana International Project, and on entrepreneurship in the creative industries. Contact: A.M.DeBruin@massey.ac.nz

Chris Cocklin is Deputy Vice-Chancellor (Research and Innovation) at James Cook University, Australia. His interests in business and the environment include corporate environmental strategy, the role of the finance sector in promoting good governance in relation to the environment and sustainability, and the challenges for SMEs in responding to environment and sustainability agendas. Professor Cocklin played a key role in establishing a partnership between Monash University and BT Investments in the area of socially responsible investment. Contact: chris.cocklin@jcu.edu.au

Jürgen Freimann is Professor of Management Science, with a focus on corporate sustainability management, and head of the corporate sustainability management research group within the Department of Economics and Management, University of Kassel, Germany. He is also the author of numerous publications (written in both German and English) in the fields of general management, research methodology and sustainability management. Contact: freimann@wirtschaft.uni-kassel.de

Karen Greig received her BA in Business Studies, and her postgraduate certificate in education and MSc in Business from Manchester Metropolitan University. Karen teaches on a range of business and environment related subjects at Manchester Metropolitan University Business School. Prior to entering academia, she worked for 20 years in software design and development. Her current research focus is environmental disclosure and green entrepreneurs. Contact: k.greig@mmu.ac.uk

David Holloway is a senior lecturer in accounting in the Murdoch Business School at Murdoch University in Western Australia. He teaches across both undergraduate and postgraduate units in accounting and corporate governance. His research interests focus on internal and corporate governance, leadership and organizational decision-making from a critical theory perspective. Contact: d.holloway@murdoch.edu.au

Robert Isaak is Guest Professor of Entrepreneurship and International Management at the University of Mannheim, Germany and Henry George Professor of International Management at the Lubin School of Business, Pace University, New York. He is the author of ten books, including Green Logic: Ecopreneurship, Theory and Ethics (Greenleaf, 1998) and, most recently, The Globalization Gap (FT Press, 2004). Dr Isaak has consulted for global enterprises, including Siemens, Technicon, Prudential Intercultural and Global Intercultural, and has taught at the University of Heidelberg, CERAM European Graduate School of Management at Sophia Antipolis, Franklin College in Lugano and The John Hopkins School of International Studies in Bologna. Contact: risaak@gmail.com

Kumba Jallow, formerly known as Leigh Holland, is a principal lecturer in the Department of Accounting and Finance at De Montfort University, Leicester, UK. She teaches on a range of undergraduate and postgraduate courses in accounting and environmental management. Her research interests include corporate social responsibility and CSR reporting in large organizations, environmental management and ecological footprinting in smaller businesses, and community development. She also leads the Accounting for Sustainability research group and edits the Journal of Applied Accounting Research. Contact: lhacc@dmu.ac.uk

Jill A. Kammermeyer PhD has professional experience in business and academia in both North America and Europe. She has served on numerous non-profit boards and is currently on the board of Sustainable Harvest International. Her research interests include entrepreneurship, sustainability, quantitative models of decision-making and ethical issues in decision-making. Contact: kammerhoch@islc.net

Gabrielle Kruks-Wisner is a PhD candidate in Political Science at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cambridge, Massachusetts, USA. She received her Bachelor's degree from Swarthmore College, Pennsylvania and her Masters in City Planning from the Department of Urban Studies and

Planning at MIT. She has worked with a number of development and human rights NGOs, carrying out field research in Nicaragua, Mexico, Mozambique and India. Her research interests lie in the political economy of development, with a particular focus on state–civil society relations, local governance, and the provision of public goods and services. Contact: gkw@mit.edu

Kate Lewis PhD is a senior lecturer in the School of Management and a Research Associate of the New Zealand Centre for Small and Medium Enterprise Research at the Wellington campus of Massey University, New Zealand. Her research interests include green entrepreneurs and environmental management practices in small and medium-sized enterprises. Contact: k.v.lewis@massey.ac.nz

Dr Lassi Linnanen is Professor of Environmental Economics and Management at Lappeenranta University of Technology's Laboratory of Environmental Technology and Management in Finland. Before joining academia in 2000, he was CEO and co-founder of Gaia Group Ltd, a leading Finnish energy and environmental management consultancy. His main research interests include corporate responsibility strategies, greenhouse gas-reduction technology commercialization and system innovations for sustainable development. Contact: Lassi.Linnanen@lut.fi

Sandra Marxen studied economic geography at the University of Osnabruck, Germany, obtaining her degree. She worked as a research assistant with the research group on corporate sustainability management at the University of Kassel.

Jim Macbeth is Dean of the School of Social Sciences and Humanities at Murdoch University in Western Australia. Jim has been undertaking research in tourism social sciences since the mid-1990s and has published numerous reports and papers from tourism projects over that time. His particular interests are the ways in which tourism development can contribute to regional sustainable development on the one hand, and the experience of travellers in the 'outback' or on the ocean, on the other. Contact: j.macbeth@murdoch.edu.au

Yamini Narayanan is a lecturer in Politics and Development Studies at La Trobe University, Melbourne. Her research interests include religion and sustainability, gender and development, and sustainable tourism. Contact: y.narayanan@latrobe.edu.au

Margaret J. Naumes PhD is a senior lecturer in Management at the University of New Hampshire, USA. She has lectured and led workshops on case writing throughout the USA and in Europe and Asia. Her research interests include social entrepreneurship (particularly among female managers) and cross-cultural studies of managerial values. Contact: margaret.naumes@unh.edu

Anastasia O'Rourke is the co-founder of Big Room Inc, a VC-backed firm that is applying for a new ".eco" top-level domain on the Internet (www.doteco.info). She has a PhD from Yale University, with a dissertation on the growth of cleantech in venture capital markets and has written several reports on cleantech venture capital for the Cleantech Venture Network (USA), Silicon Valley Bank (USA), Cleantech Ventures (Australia) and The Carbon Trust (UK). Previously she has worked at INSEAD France, the Institute for Sustainable Futures at the University of Technology, Sydney, and the EcoDesign Foundation, Sydney. Anastasia has an MSc from the International Institute for Industrial Environmental Economics at Lund University, Sweden and a BA with first-class Honours and University Medal from Sydney University, Australia. Contact: anastasia.orourke@aya.yale.edu; website: www.bigroom.ca

Bradley D. Parrish PhD was, until recently, a lecturer in Environmental Social Science at the Sustainability Research Institute, School of Earth and Environment, University of Leeds, UK where he is now a Visiting Research Fellow. His research and work on the policy and implementation of environment and development programmes has spanned four continents, including North America, Europe, East Africa and Asia-Pacific regions. Over the past six years he has co-designed and delivered courses on sustainability entrepreneurship and organizational change management for sustainability, and has been invited to deliver workshops to educators, practitioners and policy-makers on entrepreneurial approaches to sustainable development. In July 2007 he co-organized the First World Symposium on Sustainability Entrepreneurship and recently co-founded the Onesa Institute International, which works to translate these advances in research and theory into practical applications. Contact: b.parrish@see.leeds.ac.uk Website: www.onesa.org

Astad Pastakia has a Fellowship in Management from the Indian Institute of Management, Ahmedabad, and is a freelance consultant in the field of environment and natural resource management. His paper 'Grassroots Ecopreneurs: Change Agents for a Sustainable Society', was adjudged Outstanding Paper in the Journal of Organizational Change Management (1998). He has edited the book Locked Horns: Conflicts and their Resolution in Community

Based Natural Resource Management (Books for Change, 2008) and is author (with two others) of Farmer-led Participatory Research: Cases from Western India (Books for Change, 2002). Contact: astadp@gmail.com

Holger Petersen is Senior Education Manager for MBA Sustainability Management at the Centre for Sustainability Management (CSM), Leuphana University, Lüneburg, Germany. Between 2003 and 2008 he worked at the leading green bank in Germany, the UmweltBank AG in Nürnberg, Germany as an investment consultant, specializing in ecological funds and stocks. Between 1999 and 2002 he worked as a research assistant to Professor Stefan Schaltegger at the University of Lüneburg. His PhD was on the subject of ecopreneurship and strategic management. Together with Stefan Schaltegger, Holger has written course books on corporate environmental management. At the University of Lüneburg he was an initiator of the first MBA programme on sustainability management and ecopreneurship. Contact: holpetersen@uni.leuphana.de

Stefan Schaltegger is Professor of Management and Business Economics at Leuphana University of Lüneburg, Germany, head of MBA Sustainability Management and head of the Centre for Sustainability Management (CSM). He received the environmental award of the German Association of Environmentally Oriented Companies in 2007. His research areas include corporate environmental management, environmental accounting, value-based environmental management, sustainable finance and sustainable entrepreneurship. Contact: schaltegger@uni.leuphana.de

Michael Schaper is full-time Deputy Chairperson of the Australian Competition and Consumer Commission and is also an Adjunct Professor with the Curtin Business School, Curtin University of Technology in Western Australia. He has a wide background in business, academia and public policy. Previously he was Dean of Murdoch University Business School and, prior to this, served as Small Business Commissioner for the Australian Capital Territory. A former president of the Small Enterprise Association of Australia and New Zealand, Michael has been a member of the board of directors of the International Council for Small Business. Between 2003 and 2005 he held the foundation professorial chair in Entrepreneurship and Small Business within the University of Newcastle, Australia. Before his academic career, Michael worked for several years as a professional small business adviser in Australia, ran his own business and was involved in a numerous other start-up projects. He also spent several years working as a ministerial adviser at the state and federal level. Contact: michael.schaper@gmail.com

Hildegard Schick worked as research assistant with the research group on corporate environmental management at the University of Kassel, Germany, from 2000 to 2004. Prior to this, her work experience was in further education and vocational training. She is now a teacher. Contact: HilleSchick@yahoo.de

Elya Tagar is Director of Global HIV Financing with the Clinton Health Access Initiative (CHAI), based in New York. He was previously Country Director for CHAI in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and Regional Manager in West Africa, based out of Dakar, Senegal. Elya's interest focuses on the role of the private sector in sustainable development. His was formerly a Senior Associate with McKinsey and Company in New York and his experience includes work with the UN Global Compact in New York, with Social Accountability International in New York and Vietnam, and with the Sustainable Agriculture Network in Latin America. The research on which his chapter is based was carried out while Elya was employed at the Monash Environment Institute in Melbourne, Australia, and is related to his role as the chair of the BP-based Business and the Environment (BATE) network. Contact: elya.tagar@clintonfoundation.org or elya.tagar@gmail.com

David Taylor received his BSc in Business from Manchester Metropolitan University, his postgraduate certificate in education from Bolton University and his MSc in Human Resource Management from Salford University. David works on enterprise initiatives in the Manchester Metropolitan University Business School and is particularly interested in employability and the promotion of self-employment as a career option for graduates. David has published in the areas of transition in Eastern Europe, green entrepreneurs, entrepreneurial networks and enterprise education. His main research interest is the role of personal networks in the learning and decision-making processes of the entrepreneur and the role of enterprise education in the creation of graduate employability. David has worked for over ten years in small businesses in the advertising industry. Contact: d.w.taylor@mmu.ac.uk

Fiona Tilley joined the School of Earth and Environment at the University of Leeds, UK in 2002 and left in 2009. She was a member of the Sustainability Research Institute within the School. She was the programme manager for the BA in Environment and Business and taught on a range of environmental social science subjects. Her most recent research has been in the field of sustainability entrepreneurship on which she has published widely. In July 2007 she co-hosted the First World Symposium on Sustainability Entrepreneurship. For further information on this and other projects and publications in this area go to www.onesa.org or email Fiona at fiona.tilley@virgin.net.

Liz Walley joined what is now Manchester Metropolitan University Business School (MMUBS) in 1992 and is a member of the Strategy, Entrepreneurship and International Business Division. Over recent years she has championed the 'greening of the curriculum' within the Business School, introducing and developing various undergraduate and postgraduate units in business and sustainability. Prior to MMU, her 15 years' work experience was in consultancy, banking and industry. Liz's first degree was in Economics and Statistics from York University, and she later gained an MBA from Manchester Business School. She has published in the areas of environmental management and transition in Eastern Europe. Liz's current research focus is organizational greening and, specifically, the role of environmental champions and green entrepreneurs. Contact: l.walley@mmu.ac.uk