

10 things authors and editors can do to help promote their books

1. Please complete your Marketing Questionnaire and return it to us, answering the questions in full to ensure we do not miss any important marketing opportunities.
2. Ask your library or university bookshop to order a copy of your book
3. If you're speaking at a conference or professional meeting, let us know in good time and we can send you some 20% discount flyers for the delegates and a display copy of your book.
4. If you are writing an article for a newspaper, magazine or journal, which relates to your book, let us know and we will do our best to set up reader offers and ensure that your book is mentioned.
5. Ashgate will send you a PDF flyer for your book, just before publication, which you can circulate to your friends and colleagues, your university librarian and campus bookshop. If time is of the essence, you can also download a print-friendly information sheet for your book from your book's webpage.
6. You can add an announcement of your book to your email signature including a direct link to your book's page on the Ashgate website. Follow this format, inserting your book's 13 digit ISBN without spaces or dashes.

7. If you have a webpage, either your own or as part of your university's website, why not set up a link to your book on the Ashgate website? We may also be able to arrange a special price for your students. If you would like our help in setting up your link, please contact us with the URL for your website or page and the name, email address and telephone number for the technical contact responsible for the site/page to enable us to discuss exchanging links.
8. If you are a blogger, don't forget to mention your book. We can help you create a link to the Ashgate webpage. Do you read any one else's blog? Could you initiate a discussion about your book or encourage one of your colleagues to write about your book on their blog?
9. Are you a member of a group which uses email newsletters, online discussions or website forums? Your book could feature in these; why not ask the moderator of the group to mention your book? These forums are usually non-commercial so they would prefer to hear from you, rather than a publisher.
10. Your book will be listed on Amazon, therefore you can increase the visibility of your book. You can add to the entry for your book or create listmania lists which feature your book. You could ask your colleagues to write a review of your book on the Amazon site or other appropriate websites. Visit the Amazon websites for more details.
